RECOMMENDATIONS FROM YOUR CONSULTATION

It was a pleasure to speak with you today for your review of medication and progress on your ADHD journey.

Current Medications

You are currently taking your stimulant medication with good effect, adjusting the timing based on when you wake up. You are taking three tablets at once when needed, which provides adequate duration of effect. You are managing your daily dosing appropriately and not experiencing significant cardiovascular side effects with this regimen.

1. New Medications:

- Continuation of current stimulant medication with 200 tablets and five repeats prescribed
- Quetiapine script refreshed due to potential expiry before six-month review period

2. Titration regime to start as follows:

You will continue with your current dosing regimen, taking up to three tablets at once as needed, with a maximum of six tablets per day. If you require a seventh tablet on any given day, you should reduce by one tablet the following day to maintain appropriate average daily dosing.

Plan:

- Continue current medication regimen with established dosing flexibility
- Six-monthly review intervals established given stable response and good medication management
- SMS reminder will be sent in mid-March, approximately four weeks before the six-month review period
- Legal requirement for review at least every six months
- Monitor repeat prescriptions at pharmacy and confirm remaining repeats with each collection
- Contact clinic if any issues arise during the six-month interval
- Sleep management with quetiapine continues as needed with good effect

General Information to consider when taking stimulant medications:

side effects to watch out for (headaches, appetite suppression and weight loss, potential sleep disturbance, palpitations and a raised blood pressure). There is a potential risk of a lowering of mood and these medications can sometimes precipitate mania or psychosis. You should keep an eye for any mood changes, especially any thoughts of not wanting to be here, and stop the medication and let us know if you have any concerns via email at hello@elitefocusadhd.com.au or via emergency services on 000.

A high-protein diet is best to reduce the chance of experiencing anxiety or palpitations and I recommended having breakfast before taking your medication. I would advise you to avoid caffeine, alcohol and recreational drugs as these can increase the risk of anxiety and palpitations when taking stimulants.

A note on treatment options:

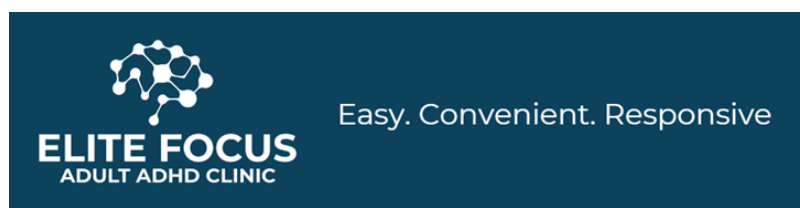

It's important to remember that non-pharmacological strategies such as psychological therapy and exercise are important tools in managing ADHD, as well as the stimulant and non-stimulant medications options. Exercise in particular can be very useful for managing some of the features of ADHD. However, it can be helpful to trial medication before looking to implement supporting strategies. We discussed the limitations of stimulants, in particular their limited efficacy aspects such as time blindness but they do help with the ability to get started on tasks, to stay focused and on track, and the ability to retain awareness of outstanding jobs, as well as reducing anxiety and easing some of the emotional reactivity that is often associated with ADHD.

Ø If you have concerning symptoms, first see your regular GP to rule out medical conditions, as these may not be medication-related.

Ø See your GP at least once a year for pathology tests (kidney, liver, vitamin D, zinc, B12, folate, iron). Deficiencies can affect cognition. For those with cardiac history or over 55, an annual ECG is required.

Ø Any issues or changes must be discussed during an appointment. If you have a concern that is urgent, it may be reviewed, by booking an earlier appointment or contacting the admin staff via email to relay your concerns so that you may be triaged for an urgent appointment.
