

A photograph of a white swan with a black head and neck, standing on a paved surface next to a black trash bin. The bin has a white plastic liner and a yellow lid. A person's leg in blue jeans is visible in the background. The scene is set outdoors, possibly in a park or a public area. The text is overlaid on a pink rectangular background.

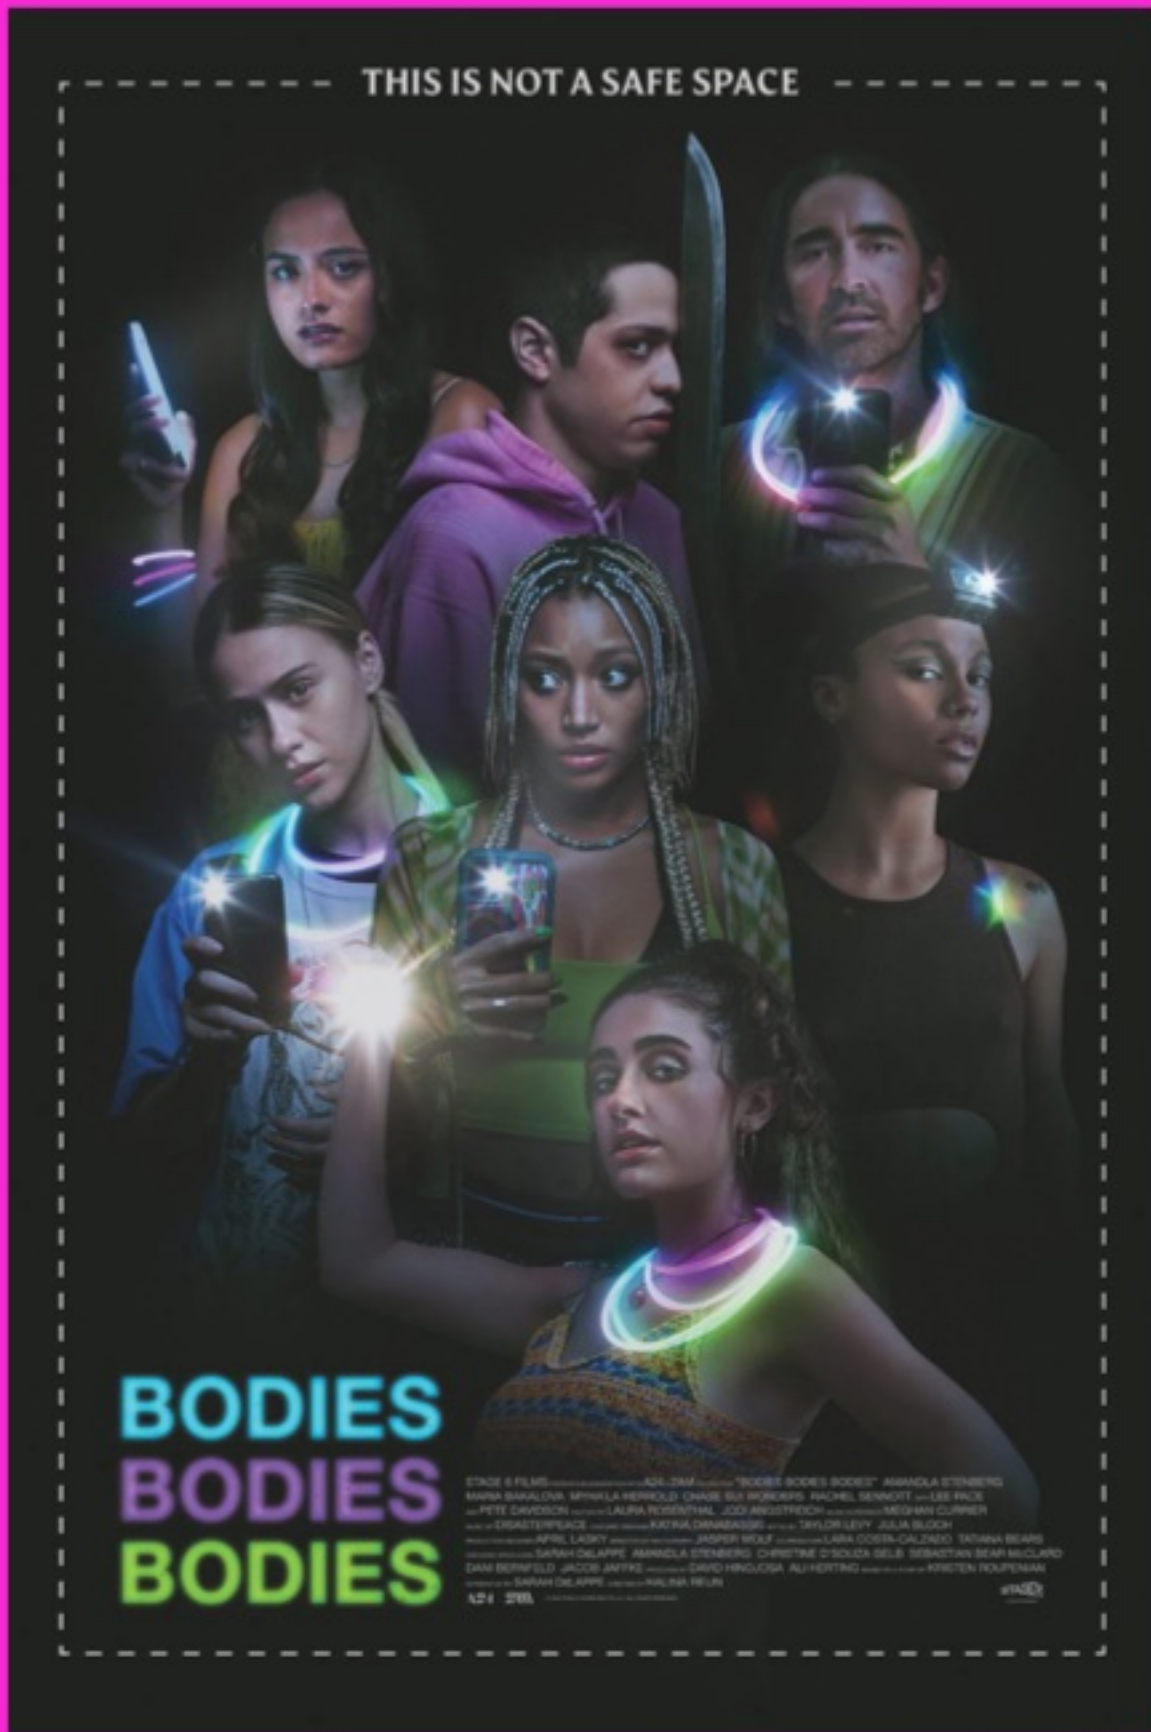

When Mazie unexpectedly inherits her eccentric year 10 art teacher's house, she moves in with her two "best friends" (and one clingy boyfriend), only to discover a flock of the local bin chickens inhabit the garden. As tensions rise, and a murder plot is planned, Mazie has to decide between her housemates and the bin chickens and discover who is the real pest after all...

NOVELTY

- Australian iconography of the bin chickens
- They feel like a joke, as well as a curse
- Modern Australian young adult dialogue and behaviour (passive aggressive flatmates, spiritualising minor inconveniences)

RELEVANCE

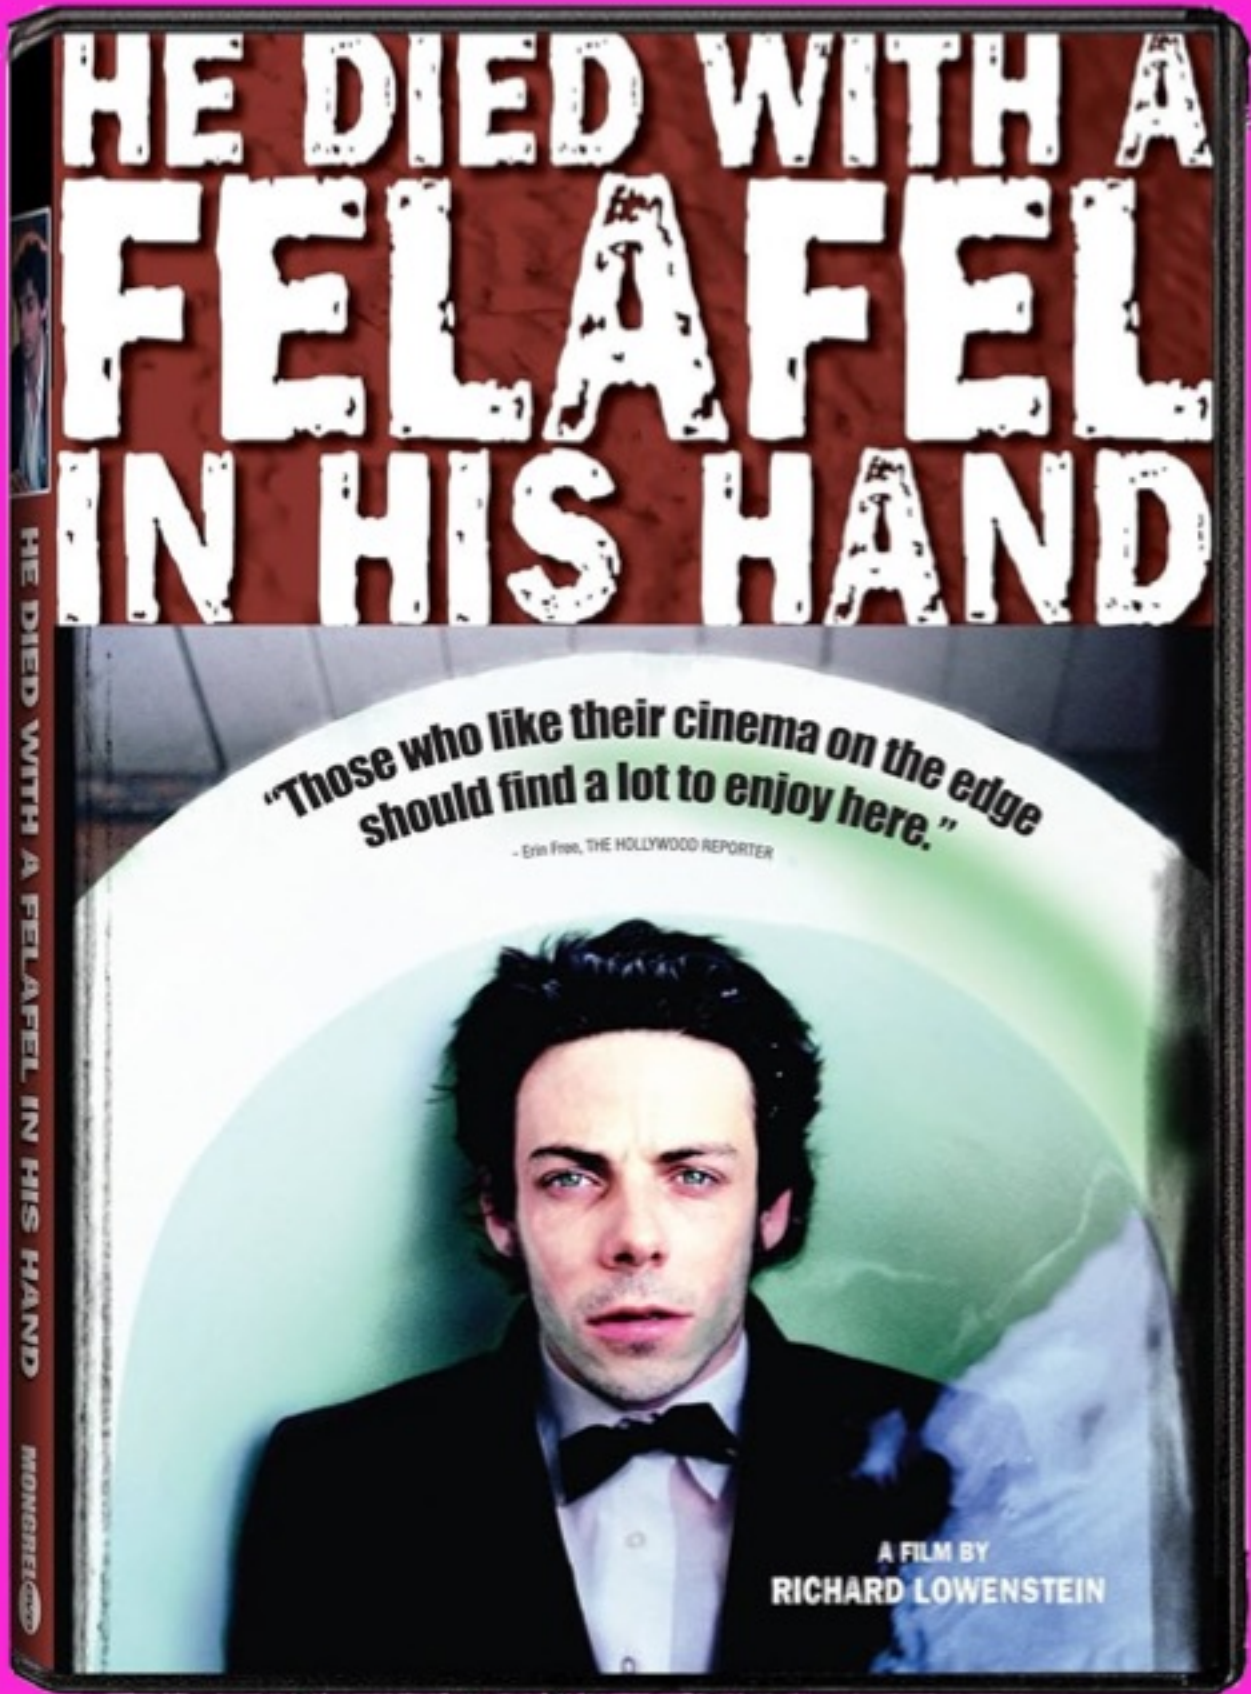

- Post Adolescence: moving out, trying to form “chosen family” and watching it fail due to unspoken resentment and poor communication
- Emotionally real even when the situations are absurd
- Outgrowing friendships, taking control, and the chaos of becoming an adult

Bodies Bodies Bodies
(2022)

Girls (2012-2017)

He Died With a Felafel in
His Hand (2001)

SCOPE

- 1 Location
- 4 Characters
- 10-15 minutes long
- Bin Chickens: Currently 10, can be minimised to one or two
- Using models and shooting from the bin chicken's perspective (fish eye lense perhaps)

ROLES:

Producer, DoP, Editor, Production Designer (!!), Audio